VISUAL IDENTITY Facebook Page Design

Students React to.... Opening of Rick Hansen

In late 2014, an artifact from long ago was recovered in the broadcasting studio – a VHS. On Friday, January 16th, 2015, a chosen five were selected to watch and discover its contents. Before they could look at it though, each student was told to insert the tape themselves. What resulted were looks of confusion, but eventually they succeeded. It turned out the VHS was a recording of the official opening of RHSS in May 2000. On the screen appeared an apparently unrecognizable Rick Hansen, Hazel McCallion, and students from fifteen years ago. Tenth graders Saad Saud, Jasmine Syed and eleventh graders Nischala Surampudi, Angela Leung, and Jackie Vang found the video "interesting", though not exactly for the event it showed. Highlights include:

"How do I fast forward again?" – Jackie Vang

"They have the same chairs in the caf – that's kind of gross." – Nischala Surampudi

"The quality is on point." – Angela Leung who later did a bad lip reading when the sound disappeared

"The fashion was weird but that guy's mustache is sick." – Saad Saud

"I'm [so] excited to see Hazel McCallion – oh my god, she's so young! I mean, younger than now." – Jasmine Syed

In the end, the students found the fact that RHSS "stayed the same" throughout the fifteen years save for its fashion entertaining, marveling at how far and fast technology had come.

Back in my Day

Times were tough way back when (ie. three years ago). They say technology changes rapidly through the years, but so do school rules and norms. Check your privilege by reading the following hardships and changes the twelfth graders once had to deal with.

- 1 WiFi was unavailable – which may pain you to read, but pained us even more.
- 2 YouTube was blocked for students. It was a dark time.
- 3 Our phones would be confiscated if we used them during the day.
- 4 We used to have to pay a quarter for being late to first period.
- 5 Way back when, ninth graders had to take math and gym for a whole year.
- 6 The atrium was off limits for eating but if you were a ninja, you could sneak in a few bites.
- 7 Announcements used to play at the start of first period, not at the end. If you were late, you were stranded in the halls.
- 8 All doors were left unlocked throughout the day so nobody had to pound at the door for a year before being let in.
- 9 Teachers mainly used My Class then Angel before Desire to Learn (D2L) came out. Next thing you know, we'll be taking exams on tablets.
- 10 If you think there are a lot of people in the hallways now, imagine walking around with 2000 students.

AN INTERVIEW WITH AN INSPIRATION

"My Story. Your Story," reads Songheng Yi's Powerpoint slide as she speaks with Hansen for Humanity about her journey sponsored by Me to We. Having spent twenty-four days in the fishing village of Asemkro, Ghana, Songheng's summer before senior year was worthwhile.

First of all, how did you pay for this?
I sold Rafiki chains from Me to We at school and worked every day in July. Then there was my fantastic friend who saved up and gave me $100. But it definitely took a lot of time and work.

How did the trip change you?
The biggest way it changed me was the little things, which sounds like an oxymoron but it works. We could only shower once a week since all the water was pumped by hand. It changed the way I thought about saving water. We also visited a dungeon used during the time of Trans-Atlantic slavery, which really shook me up. And I'm a lot more educated in overfishing – and whale-hunting.

What did Me to We have you do?
What didn't I do? I helped build a classroom. The thing is we sit here [at home] complaining about learning what they dream about learning. All of the kids were so happy just to learn. While I worked, one boy named Joseph would sit in the back and ask me what certain words in English meant. He also kept calling me 'Sara'. So one day, I asked him why and he told me it was his sister's name.

What was your favourite part of the whole trip?
Meeting the best people. The kids impacted me more than I ever could. They looked up to me like I was Batman. Actually, Joseph and another kid John walked for two hours to see us off when we had to leave. It was really sweet – all of it was.
